Natural resource buildings can change not only your city's tax revenue and industrial supply chain, but also the entire design of specialized areas. My test city dropped from 1042 to 893 imports after I converted my border industries to oil/memory. The buildings of agriculture and forestry have more or less similar employment stats for the genā'stria of level 1, while the buildings of oil and memory are similar in this regard to the moderately developed genā'rica industry. Feature depletion [edit | Edit source] Forestry and agriculture are renewable resources, which will continue to produce raw materials indefinitely. The logical is that the Proximity Yimby that Cargo Harbor and Cargo Trains provide should be reserved only for your genuine industry. That's in addition to your regular highway. The game has a built-in mod "Unlimited oil and minute and minute are not reduced from the ground" [1], which prevents them from being exhausted. It also has a dedicated highway from its genā'stria to its trade. They won't make as much profit as agriculture and forestry because they can't provide themselves. Traffic flow. Benefits of leveled industry work without having to invest city services. I play without mods, so I'm trying to squeeze every bit of optimization out of the vanilla version as possible. Build specialized industries near load terminals are a waste because they will always be a dedicated road (use track 1 if you want©) that connects your oil/memory area directly to your genuine area. DLC of industries [edit | edit source] DLC Industries has added new buildings and methanians to the game that make use of Natural Resources. Specialized industrial buildings do not go up, regardless of their circumstances. Each of the natural resources and specializations related to these resources has its own advantages and disadvantages. After that, your traffic is very relieved. Benefits: Slightly less reduced imports. Industrial specialists will produce more tax revenue stemming from specialised areas if relevant natural resources exist. New buildings will start to appear in the affected industrial zone, changing their look and make. You can increase this effect by increasing industrial taxes only in specialized districts. It is possible to further reduce this value with the planning policy of the Industrial Space, but I don't think this is worth it because it costs a lot of money. References [edit | edit source] I spent a lot of time today experimenting with the industries of oil and minÁrio. It is not possible to apply specialization until the appropriate step is reached. In this way, they will help your genuine industry reach level 3. They should be the first one left on the highway when someone is traveling to your city. In this way, in a properly balanced city, all possible imports (oil/minÁrio) by highway made after the first exit. A district of forest industries can have four different types of natural resources: forests, water field, oil and water. See Exclusive and deposits. The Tree Planting will replace the Faith Table Grands by Forests and the Faith Table Grands will be removed permanently. The extraction of oil and minor, minor, eventually exhausting it entirely. This can be quite a shock to your transportation system and supply chain, as a zone that previously provided the raw forest will turn into one that needs to import it. Please help check or update older sections of this article. At the very least, some were last checked for version 1.12. The distribution of natural resources can be seen on the map using the overlap of natural resources. If you do not remove specialization from the area, these buildings will be replaced by specialized secondary. The darker the color shade, the better the ground will extract the associated resource. Also seems cool on the information map of importance. That's counterintuitive. The exploitation of natural resources and specialized industry is necessary if you do not want to carry out more of the supply chain of resources within your city. Each feature will assign a color. Specializes [edit | Edit source] You cannot benefit from these zones of industrial zones over natural resources by specifying the Area as a district and applying the relevant industrial specialization in the Districts menu. card.
